un- A prefix derived from two sources and with two uses, viz. those of negation and those of reversal or undoing. As expressive of simple negation it is A.Sax. un- (Goth. un-, D. on-, L. in-, all signifying not); and in this sense it is used chiefly before adjectives, past participles passive, and present participles used adjectively, being also prefixed to some nouns as in untruth, undress, unrest, unwisdom, etc. Before some words of Latin origin it may be used alternatively with in or non; thus unalterable, inalterable; unelastic, inelastic, and non-elastic. As expressing reversal it represents A.Sax. on-, ond-, and an- in answer (Icel. and Goth. and-, G. ant-, L. ante, before), and is generally prefixed to active transitive verbs, as, undo, unlearn, unlock, unmake, etc. As adjectives and participles with the prefix un-, simply in the sense of not, are almost unlimited in number, and their meaning generally quite obvious, many of them are omitted from this work. When such words, however, have a special signification or usage of their own, and are not simply to be explained as equivalent to 'not' and their latter element, they are here given (as, for instance, unaccountable, unruly, unconscionable, unparalleled, etc.). Verbs and nouns with the other un as a prefix are also carefully defined.
